Mount Rainier National Park

Mount Rainier National Park located 80 miles (129km) from Seattle and is a popular destination for sight seers, hikers, climbers and photographers.

Ionic Mount Rainier is 14,411 feet above sea level. Subalpine wildflower meadows surround the volcano and ancient forest ring the lower slopes. Whether you're heading to Rainier for the day, overnight or an extended hiking trip, you're bound to find new adventures.

Take a Hike

If you're planning a day hike in the park, you won't need a hiking permit; however, you will need one for overnight hikes. In the summer, simply pick up a permit at any ranger station in the park. In the winter, you'll need to get a permit at the Longmire Ranger Station. You'll find more than 260 miles of trails for day hiking. Trails lead through peaceful old growth forest, colorful meadows (late summer) and river valleys. Check out the most popular day hikes at both Paradise and Longmire.
